GLOBAL CULTURE & CITIZENSHIP

Our lives are characterized by the decades-old structural changes called “globalization.” But how well do we know about globalization and its impact on our everyday life? How do people understand and practice their “citizenship” – both a sense and social conditions of belonging – under the duress of globalization? How do our cultural practices reveal complex exchanges and intimacy beyond the simple binarism of “global vs. local”?

We will survey the history of globalization and its impact on various domains of modern and contemporary culture ranging from global feminized labor to neoliberal economy to actions against climate change, specifically looking at major debates and case studies.
